It is six years since Archduke Francis Ferdinand was assassinated by the fanatic, Princip, an act that was seized upon by madly ambitious junkers to plunge the world into the most destructive war of history, and it is one year since the signing of the peace treaty. The world will only solemnly ask itself how much it has advanced since the beginning of that long and orgy of hate and horror and how much of the benefits of peace it has realized in the year of nominal peace.

The motor crashes and casualties are becoming more frequent, and the plea of unavoidable accident cannot be accepted by any who observe the narrow margin which the average motorist leaves for accident. Only constant vigilance will avail, and this, under the stimulus of speed, becomes too irksome to be the check on the hand which holds the wheel.

The doughboy and the polli will stay brothers, says the national commander of the American Legion, French and American soldiers fought side by side in this country and American and French soldiers at a later day, fought side by side in France. This makes a double tie which even time will find it hard to break.

It is said that former Premier Clemenceau may return to public life. The great old "tiger" cannot settle down, probably, to a monotonous obscurity any more than the old war horse can be content with a joggling existence.

The medical man who has cut meat and sugar from his diet schedule would seem to be in a position to laugh hilariously at the pretensions of the H. C. L.

GUINEAS THRIVE ON FREE RANGE

Satisfactory Results May Be Obtained by Confining in Substantial Pen.

GIVE GRAIN DURING WINTER

Vegetables Such as Potatoes, Turnips, Cabbage, Etc., Should Be Provided Together With Grit, Charcoal and Oyster Shell.

Guineas are kept in the best breeding condition upon free range. They may be confined, however, if necessary, with satisfactory results. One extensive guinea raiser confined as many as 45 hens and 15 males in an acre pen throughout the breeding and laying season. This pen is enclosed with a wire fence five feet high and the birds prevented from flying over by the flight feathers of one wing being clipped. Within the pen is a grass pasture with bushes here and there where the hens make their nests by scratching out a bowl-shaped hollow in the ground. The winters being severe, a roosting shed is provided having a elevated board reaching from the floor to the roosts for the wing-clipped birds to walk up.

Allow Free Range.

Most guinea raisers, however, allow their breeding stock free range of the entire farm at all times. This helps to keep the birds strong and vigorous. During the winter the breeders should be fed a grain mixture of corn, wheat, and oats twice a day. Where no green feed is available on the range at this time of the year, vegetables, such as potatoes, turnips, beets and cabbage should be substituted, poultry specialists of the United States Department of Agriculture suggest.

Animal Feed Essential.

Animal feed is essential to best results and can be supplied by feeding meat scrap or skim milk. Given free range, where the supply of natural feed during the winter and early spring is ample, as it usually is in the southern portion of the United States, the guineas may be left to pick up a considerable part of their feed. Free access to grit, charcoal and oyster shell is necessary throughout the breeding and laying season. Avoid having the breeders too fat, but keep them in good, firm flesh.

FIND ROUTE PRODUCE TAKES

Shippers of Fruits and Vegetables Are Advised to Learn Market Likes and Dislikes.

Any intelligent attempt to better marketing conditions must be based on a good working knowledge of present agencies and their functions. The nearer that both producer and consumer can come to an understanding and appreciation of the work devolving upon the distributor, the nearer will Americans approach a solution of many of the problems incident to the movement of fruits and vegetables.

The shipper who has definite knowledge of the course his goods will take when they reach a big market has a great advantage over the man who has no idea of methods of distribution. He can safeguard his interests by retaining a measure of control over his product after it reaches destination.

Shippers or prospective shippers of fruits and vegetables are advised to get in touch with their principal market, learn its likes, dislikes, and peculiarities, study the means whereby their goods are distributed to consumers, and secure a working knowledge of the chief problems incident to the handling of their commodities.

PRINCIPLES OF BOOKKEEPING

First and Most Important Step Toward Establishing Accounting System for Farm.

Getting a knowledge of accounting principles is the first and most important step toward establishing an accounting system suited to one's individual needs. There are many degrees in farm accounting, from the simple to the extended and complex. Farmers' Bulletin 511, copies of which may be had upon request of the United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, contains an outline of the principles of simple farm bookkeeping.

Thermo-Seal Inner Lining

THE Thermo-Seal Inner Lining is the very foundation of successful heating with a pipeless furnace. Consider this carefully. Brass—Warm air must keep on coming from the furnace, and cold air must keep on going in. If this circulation is retarded there will be no heat! Circulation will be retarded unless the cold air is kept cold until it reaches the bottom of furnace. (Note the direction of travel shown by arrows.) The Thermo-Seal Inner Lining, consisting of heavy asbestos covered with heavy galvanized steel plates keeps the cold air chamber permanently cool. It maintains air circulation—is assurance of plenty of healthful heat.
